Glorious Eccentrics: Modernist Women Painting And Writing

Synopsis

This book explores the life and art of seven extraordinary women—of the late nineteenth and twentieth century, who had a—tremendous if not yet fully—acknowledged—impact on the modernist movement and its reception.—Judith Gautier, Suzanne Valadon, Dorothy Bussy, Dora Carrington, Paula Modersohn-Becker, Emily Carr and Claude Cahun—were powerful forces— in— their various fields.—Each—lived an unusual life, the eccentricity of which was in large part responsible for its creative intensity. Drawing on much unpublished material, the stories recounted here, often involving very famous—men— including Utrillo, Degas, Renoir, Toulouse-Lautrec,—Wagner, Hugo,—Rilke, and Gide— show a singular—courage and—determination.—Whether as writers, translators, painters, or photographers, these innovators stood out among their contemporaries as remarkable—contributors to modernism.

—Once again the distinguished Mary Ann Caws casts light into the corners of modernism with—distinctive grace and keenly provocative—intelligence: her Glorious Eccentrics freshly redefines the lives of the—seven remarkably talented, courageous women who, in daring to be different, bequeath to all of us a legacy of magnificent singularity,—courage, candor, and strength.——Brenda Wineapple, Author of Hawthorne: A Life and Sister Brother Gertrude and Leo Stein——A rich and persuasive account of the relationship between social eccentricity and artistic creativity in the lives of seven thoroughly modern women artists and writers. Mary Ann

Caws brilliantly re-imagines a new role for eccentricity (literally deviating from the center) as a powerful and enabling force in women's lives. Whitney Chadwick, author of Women, Art, and Society "Shuttling seamlessly among literature, music, and art, Mary Ann Caws banishes the famous men to the wings and summons to the spotlight her astonishing cast of women artists. The 'Eccentricity' of Valadon, Carrington, and the rest is nothing cultivated for show but rather the inevitable and moving accompaniment of lives lived passionately, creatively, and without stint. This is a glorious and inspiring book." --Christopher Benfey, Author of Degas in New Orleans "Intense, personal, fluent, Mary Ann Caws' writing is itself an adventure like the ones she evokes in this book, where seven women seek out and find the edgy regions of art and life." --Haunting stories. --Michael Wood, Princeton University "Caws writes with verve and passion, and creates compelling portraits of seven 'heroines' of late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century western art and literature. Admiring their creative energy and their refusal to be less than themselves, she draws out the remarkable elements in the characters and stories of these sometimes neglected figures." --Jennifer Mundy, Head of Collection Research, Tate "Glorious Eccentrics is an intriguing book, filled with delightful detail and revelations into all varieties of creative, emotional and spiritual conviction; it also serves up insights into the spectrum of self-confidence through to self-doubt." --BorderCrossings

I was quite excited to read this book. I am quite interested in learning about the lives and personalities of female artists and hoped to draw some inspiration from their unique experiences for my own dialog with the art world. Unfortunately I was unable to finish the even first chapter of this book, though the introduction was pleasant enough to read, because the writing was painfully awful. While the author clearly knows her subject and is passionate about the lives she is attempting to chronicle, her writing was cluttered and disorganized. I think this could have been a fabulous book if it had been edited quite a bit. This is a great example of prose with an excessive number of parenthetical asides and strangely organized trivia. I would love to see a different version of this book with simpler writing because the subject matter is indeed glorious.

May I echo every word of the last reviewer? I too was looking forward to reading what ought to have been an fascinating book yet by the first page was evidently so badly written, a ramshackle stream-of-consciousness which was unintelligible, nonsensical, judgemental and plain thoughtless of its readership that I quite lost patience. I cannot imagine how it could have been more awfully written, nor how it was published nor how other academics could praise it. It reminded me of so many teachers and lecturers who get so immersed in their own enthusiasms that they forget how to communicate with anyone else.
