Legal Research And Writing For Undergraduates

Synopsis

The instruction in this book has been uniquely selected to teach the type of legal writing most revered in the law, and most successful in law schools. The instruction is supported by a complementary website that includes additional articles and exercises. Law schools differ from other professional institutions in that law schools do not impose specific course prerequisites. As a result, many first year students feel ill-prepared for the writing rigors of law. The instruction and exercises in this book are designed to provide that, often much needed, additional preparation.
