Kevin Revolinski has written for the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune, and he is the author of several guidebooks, including Best Rail Trails Wisconsin (FalconGuides).

This short booklet will take you to 20 different parks in the greater Milwaukee area. Each chapter/walk gives info on location and GPS coordinates, whether it is pet-friendly, if admission is charged, length of trail in miles and approximate time, and gives directions on how to get there. There is also usually something of a blurb about the details of the trail or walk itself, sometimes more informative (or accurate) than others. Additionally, small maps are provided of the walks; these are so basic that they are occasionally deceptive in larger parks such as Lapham Park or Grant Park, but so be it. All of the parks are accessible by car, and all are pretty simple to get around in; this is not adventure hiking by any means. But if you are looking for a change of pace from your routine dog walk, and are willing to drive a little bit and maybe pay a park fee, you might give this booklet a try. My biggest complaint is that, at $10, this seems a little bit overpriced.
